

Now available from East View: An essential collection of partisan serials from the Wahdat Library, the most comprehensive private collection of rare newspapers and journals from Afghanistan. The Afghan Serials Collection includes over 45 titles published from the early 1970s to the late 1990s – a critical period for the history of Afghanistan. Documenting the breadth of Afghanistan’s political epochs, the Afghan Serials Collection covers the use of the press by many groups that sought to shape Afghanistan’s social and intellectual landscape during this turbulent time. Various ideologies are represented in these publications, published by opposing factions from the Taliban to anti-Taliban groups, to anti-Soviet jihadi and mujaheddin groups to the People’s Democratic Party of Afghanistan.

The Afghan Serials Collection showcases unique press materials from a key era that shaped not only Afghanistan and the Middle East, but the entire world. Featuring content not assembled elsewhere, the collection is a chronicle of the rich and dynamic Afghan press and an essential resource for scholars and area experts.

About the Wahdat Library

The Wahdat Library, founded by Afghan scholar and journalist Ahmad Shah Wahdat and collected over a nearly 30-year period, is the most comprehensive private collection of rare newspapers and journals from Afghanistan. The Wahdat Library represents a significant step forward in the preservation of Afghanistan's press history and includes nearly 80 newspaper titles (30,000+ issues, 100,000+ pages) and nearly 350 journal titles (8,000+ issues, 400,000+ pages).

The Wahdat Library is not a static endeavor, but an ongoing effort with East View to collect, digitize and make available the totality of Afghanistan's critical press history. The Afghan Serials Collection is the first release from the Wahdat Library, with subsequent releases of additional titles to follow.
